

UNDERSTANDING INDIVIDUAL PREFERENCES

Centering the individual with whom you work in their own probation experience means understanding their own preferences related to treatment. While there's no guarantee you'll be able to match them perfectly, this will also help you set expectations about what they can expect of their MOUD experience.

Consider using these questions conversationally in early meetings with the individual instead of a list of questions to complete. You may already know some of this information and need to skip some questions. This form is inspiration to get you started with these conversations.

MOUD HISTORY & MEDICATION COMPLIANCE

1. Have you tried any medications for OUD, either under the care of a physician or on your own? If so, which types? Suboxone? Buprenex? Methadone? Vivitrol?
2. If so, how did you take it? By tablet? Film? Injection? Extended Release? Solution? Injection?
3. What was your experience with these medications?
4. Do you want to consider medication to treat your opioid use disorder? What concerns do you have about MOUD?
5. Do you have reliable transportation to pick up the medication everyday?
6. Given your daily responsibilities, is there a time that works best for medication pick up? Thinking about your daily routine and responsibilities, do you foresee any trouble picking up the medication everyday?
7. Thinking about your daily routine, do you foresee any trouble taking the medication everyday?
8. What strategies do you think will help you stay on-track with picking up and taking medication on time everyday?

MEDICAL HISTORY
